

Professor Galbraith's comment for the U.N. Book launching on Thursday.

I would like to give a special word for Barbara Baudot and for "Candles in the Dark." I am a pleased and serious admirer of both. Barbara Baudot is an accomplished member of the community of the socially concerned. She here makes herself available to an international audience of the first order. It was my pleasure to read this book as a manuscript, to welcome its publication. And it is now my pleasure to urge that it be made known to all of intelligence and good will. We have a more than adequate flow of volumes on the hard core of economic relationships; let all respond to one with deep social concern to human kindness.
